Knowing the signs of crisis

A mental health “crisis” is generally a dramatic change in behavior that prevents someone from functioning as usual, or they express that they may harm themselves or others. Signs of a crisis can include:

- Difficulty functioning, such as trouble getting out of bed, going to work or doing daily tasks
- An unwillingness or inability to take care of one’s personal hygiene
- Intense or sudden changes in mood
- Psychosis such as hallucinations or delusions
- Sudden paranoia
- Feeling increasingly agitated, angry or violent
- Having suicidal thoughts or making plans
- Harming oneself or heavily self-medicating with drugs or alcohol
- Isolating or withdrawing from others

If you observe such alarming behaviors in someone, it’s important to engage that person in discussion about their condition and help arrange immediate assistance for them. See the Mind Your Mental Health article on page two for specific steps you can take to help keep someone safe.

Mind Your Mental Health

September is Suicide Prevention Awareness Month

Understanding the issues around suicide and mental health is an important way to take part in suicide prevention. Helping others who may be in crisis can make a difference and save lives.

- Research shows that people having thoughts of suicide feel relief when someone asks after them in a caring, non-judgmental way. It's important to ask, "Are you thinking about hurting yourself?"
- Reduce a suicidal person's access to lethal items. While it's not always easy, asking if the at-risk person has a plan, and removing firearms or medications, will help.
- Contact the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 988 via call or text and/or make a connection with a trusted person like a family member, friend, spiritual advisor or mental health professional.
- Keeping in touch with the at-risk person after a crisis or discharge from treatment can help reduce that person's risk.

Working on Wellbeing

How to manage chronic pain

- Chronic pain is discomfort that lasts three months or more. It's important that your medical team diagnoses the pain's cause(s). The best treatment plans use a variety of strategies including medications, lifestyle changes and therapies.
- Your doctor may prescribe medications such as corticosteroids, muscle relaxers, NSAIDs, acetaminophen, medical marijuana (depending on local laws), nerve blocks/stimulation, or anti-inflammatory medication injections. Be sure to get regular exercise, adequate sleep and eat healthy foods. Join a support group for chronic pain.

Managing Work-Life Flow

Self-care strategies

Self-care is anything you do that helps you stay physically, mentally and emotionally well. Choose activities that will replenish your energy and restore your balance.

Start small by adding a relaxation activity to your daily routine (e.g., meditation, muscle relaxation or deep breathing), journaling, a new relaxing hobby or 30 minutes of exercise—such as walking.

Add new self-care practices when ready. Be sure to eat healthy, regular meals, stay hydrated and get adequate sleep.
